

In 1832, Theophile Vaché and his three nephews emigrated from the Bordeaux region of France to California. The Vachés had been making wines for several generations and brought their family tradition with them when they resettled in California.

Through the years the Vaché wine making tradition has produced fine sacramental and premium wines for limited distribution. Now, almost 150 years later, we are proud to introduce outstanding varietal wines produced exclusively from grapes grown in the Temecula region of California.

Temecula is located in the South Coast mountain region, 23 miles from the Pacific Ocean. The micro climate of Temecula is similar to the Napa region and is governed by a strong coastal influence. In the early morning, mist and fog from the ocean moves into the vineyards and is followed by prevailing afternoon breezes from the Pacific Ocean. This combination of cool, moist mornings and clear moderately warm days enable this region to produce the type of grapes and wine characteristics the Vachés recognized as essential for producing outstanding varietal wines.

We invite you to enjoy the Vaché heritage.
